

1. APEX

The peak where two strokes meet to create an angle of less than 90 degrees.

2. ARM

A stroke extending horizontally and diagonally from a vertical stem.

3. ASCENDER LINE

The invisible line that marks the top of letters extending over capital letters.

4. BEAK

The small projection off of an adjoining stroke, or creates a terminal at an arch's end.

5. BOWL

The lower part of rounded letters such as lowercase "a" or uppercase "B."

6. BRACKET

The part of the serif that connects the stem and another stroke (creates a curve or wedge).

7. COUNTER (CLOSED)

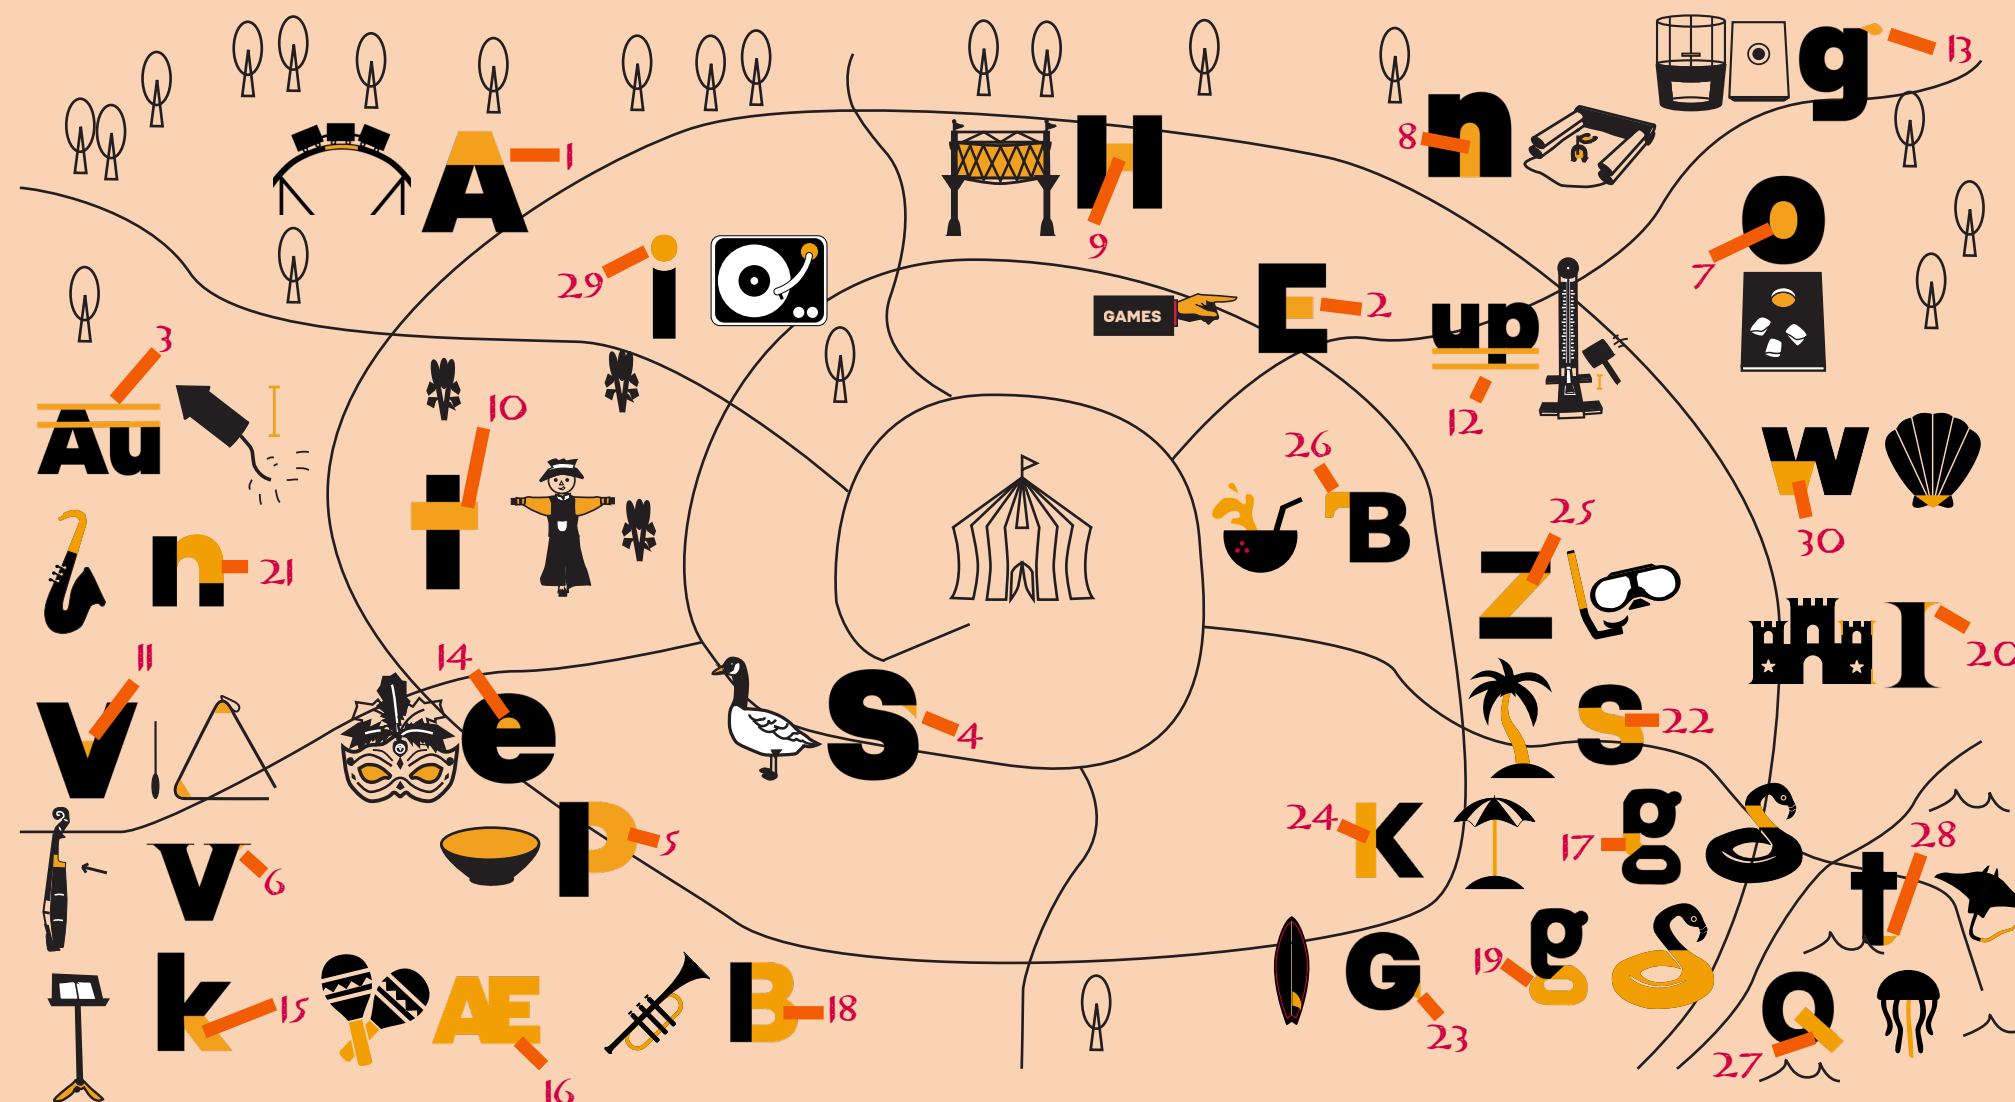

The complete enclosed area of a rounded letter.

8. COUNTER (OPEN)

The partially enclosed area of rounded letters (such as "u" and "n").

9. CROSSBAR

A horizontal stroke connecting vertical strokes on either side (such as "H" or "A").

22. SPINE

The curved stroke that forms the main portion of an uppercase or lowercase "S".

23. SPUR

A sharp projection that extends from a stroke or stem.

24. STEM

The main vertical stroke or strokes of a glyph.

25. STROKE

The straight or curved components of a glyph that are diagonal.

26. SWASH

An ornamental extension added to a standard stroke, used for flourish.

27. TAIL

A decorative descending stroke.

28. TERMINAL

A small curve that can be found at the end of a stem or stroke.

29. TITLE/DOT

The dot above the lowercase "i" and "j".

30. VERTEX

The point where two strokes meet at the bottom of a glyph.

RHYTHM & SOL'S TYPE ANATOMY STUDY GUIDE

14. EYE

The closed counter of a lowercase "e."

15. LEG

The (usually) diagonal downward stroke on the letters "k" and "R."

16. LIGATURE

Two or more letters joined together to form a single glyph.

17. LINK

The stroke that connects the upper and lower bowls of a lowercase "G".

18. LOBE

The upper and lower bowls of an uppercase "B".

19. LOOP

A counter, often closed, below the baseline that connects to an upper counter via a link.

20. SERIF

Decorative strokes that appear on stems, arms, ascenders, and descenders in a serif typeface.

21. SHOULDER

A curved stroke extending outward and downward from the top of a stem.

LEGEND

